OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

THE CABINET CHANGE.

McCrary goes out. The power of the West in the Union, and its tendency to compromise. A sketch of Alexander Ramsey, the new Minister of War.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30th.

The retirement of Secretary McCrary from the War office, is the first break in the Cabinet of President Hayes, a ministry that considering its heterogeneous elements has polled remarkably well together from the start. That the cabinet at the beginning was an experiment, I believe has never been denied, and certainly has been tacitly admitted by the President. Messrs. Evans and Selznick were a concession to the reform element in the party; the former a strong pillar whose republicanism was never questioned, but whose ideas of government were opposed to the "machinery" principle in politics, whatever that may mean, in the abstract; and the latter, a non-conformist whose opinions no one has ever been able to find out. Mr. Devens represented the better element of the opposition, being quite as good a democrat in the North as was Mr. Key in the South, and both have made excellent republicans without losing whatever democracy they ever possessed. Mr. Sherman was a personal appointment with a mission to fulfill, which I presume no one questions has been magnificently performed. Mr. Thompson again, represented the old-line Whigs, the bone and sinew of the reform party, and to Mr. McCrary fell the honor of representing the young republicans, an element that has come to number and political power since the creation of the party, with no political record with which to be confronted, and is ideas of government that cannot be traced to natural and personal selection.

Mr. McCrary was the embodiment of that plain, rugged, good-humored, yet obstinate and determined Western pluck that has conquered the prairie and forest and founded an empire in the midst of a howling wilderness despite all known laws and precedents of the ages. It could be no uncommon race, before whose advance forests and hills are leveled, vast streams retire or change their course, and a savage and warlike people made to flee from treacherous whirlwind. It was a race endowed with indomitable energy and courage, joined to applicability and a keen desire for freedom and independence; a race that exists to-day as a living, breathing example of the survival of the fittest; a race that not alone establishes the practicality of a republic, but ensures its permanency. It is more than the balance of power, it is a large majority that no mere paroxysm of change or reform or modification in social or political or religious government will ever effect; a stout rock that will withstand severest shocks and resist greater encroachments that are ever likely to occur. It is to the West that the future of the Union, no less than the nation, is confided; a section that is not alone self-supporting but competitive and more than able to feed and defend the balance. It is a section where the percentage of illiteracy is less, morally greater, more industrious, and the wealth more generally diffused among the people than any other section of the Union. Hence it is that the West is strongly Republican, the only exception being the single Southern corner of Indiana, which is pushed suddenly down into Kentucky to include it with the sectional ideas and bigotry of the South. It was with all the representative vigor and energy and republicanism of that section, that Mr. McCrary entered the Cabinet. In the political parlance of the day, he was and is a "shallow," a partisan regarding whose opinions and preferences there can be no question, and whose record dates from and embraces the record of the republican party.

That he has made an excellent minister is generally conceded. Without being a position wholly to his liking, it has been a field wherein his thorough knowledge of the law and unusual executive abilities have afforded him an opportunity to increase his reputation without particularly exerting it. It is well known that he entered the Cabinet unwillingly, and that he has considered his sojourn to be one of temporary inconvenience and a sacrifice to his partisanship. His leaving the law to be his adaptive, as well as congenial occupation, it was no more than reasonable that he should desire to return to it, and that he should accept, if not have sought, the occasion afforded by the retirement of Judge Dillon, to withdraw from an active political career to a life position in accordance with his tastes and for which he is particularly fitted. He will leave the position he has so fully occupied since the incurring of the present administration, amid the sincere regret of all classes who have come in contact with him, and amid their earnest wishes for his success in his new sphere of duty.

Alexander Ramsey of Minnesota, who has been nominated for the vacancy, merely resumes the public life from which he retired a few years ago and which he has followed for more than forty years, having occupied the highest positions both in state and national politics. Ramsey was one of the seven prominent republicans who went ashore with the tidal wave of 1874, from the effect of which the party may be said to have wholly recovered with his return to Washington. Logan, Chandler, Carpenter, Pratt, Ramsey, Pomeroy, Fenton, all fell by the hands of the reform element in their own party, and with but one exception their places were filled by republicans of a weaker type. Logan and Carpenter have regained their seats with the political reaction; Pratt and Chandler have no further need of worldly honors; Pomeroy has been succeeded by as determined a stalwart; Fenton will be revenged out of the November cyclone in New York, and Ramsey enters the Cabinet thro' patient waiting and the political law of compensation. Without means of easy reference, I believe that Governor Ramsey entered Congress about 1843, and served two terms in the House from the Dauphin or Schuylkill district of Pennsylvania. With equal certainty I believe he was an original Whig, and engineered the Taylor campaign of 1848 as chairman of the State committee. He certainly went to Minnesota as Territorial Governor upon his organization, as a Fillmore appointee in 1849 or '50, holding the office until 1851. I have been told that he served a term later, as Mayor of St. Paul. He was again Governor of the State by election from 1850 until the breaking out of the war, and entered the Senate to represent Rice, a democrat, in 1863, where he remained until 1865.

Ramsey is rich and popular in Washington, as well as in the Northwest, the people of which important section are said to be pleased with his nomination. He is about 65, fat, jolly and extremely well preserved. Mrs. Ramsey is physically modeled on the same plan as the Governor, and there is a daughter who is ditto. Socially Mrs. Florence T. Letter from Florida.

WALDO, Fla., Nov. 20, 1879.

Mr. Editor.—Your ever welcome

"GAZETTE" informs us that you are leaving cold weather, but we here can hardly realize it, as we are sitting without fire in the open air, doors and windows open, glass at 80° in the shade. We have had no frost yet;

everything is green and growing,

mocking birds singing, skies deligh-

fully blue and a stillness that seems at times almost oppressive. Whatever faint one may find with Florida-ing change can be brought against the climate. A pleasant day in Florida is perfect; yet there is something that makes one feel sad, if one could not be in harmony with anything so perfect. We seldom suffer with the heat, except when exposed to the midday sun; in the shade it is always cool. A house is only needed as a protection against the sun and rain;

as a neighbor remarked, when seeing the blinds closed to keep out the heat, "I wish I had such a place."

Crops are now being gathered, sugarcane being ground, cotton nearly all picked. You cannot realize the beauty of a cotton field in bloom—a perfect flower garden covered with white, pink and yellow flowers, and the white cotton bolls. We have been verbenas, heartsease, and

sweet scented violet, and many other flowers. The beautiful Cape Jessamine, in perfection and almost endless variety, in bloom constantly from February to December, December and January being the only months when they are not in bloom. In these two months we have verbenas, heartsease, and

sweet scented violet, and many other flowers. The robin visits us in the winter in flocks of hundreds, reminding us of our northern home; and as I listen to their singing it seems as if they were bringing pleasant messages from our friends. But just at this time the greatest wonder is the first lady in our colony, born in the family of our near neighbor, late of Boston. It is a great attention to the natives, who come from far and near to see it. An old lady says, "How smart these northerners are, even the babies."

The colored people have a great regard for the northern "nuekas."

A colored family, an old man and his wife, who live near, had quite a good place, with cabin and other buildings; had worked about ten acres all with the hoe, had no debt—and a man bought the place over their heads and turned them out. The neighbors gave them enough to buy a piece of land; they had got a small fortune in hunting stuff. Six months ago I saw them dreary and barefooted, with nothing but a ragged shirt and a pair of shoes. They have a small garden, a few chickens, and one cow. They have a

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

THE RETURN OF CONGRESS.

Scenes instantaneous views of both Houses from the galleries. The falling of the Gavel. The pause over the final paragraph of the Message.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7th.

Congress is with us again and I presume we should be happy. A due regard for executive however, compels me to assert boldly and defiantly, that during my somewhat extended observation of it cannot recall a period when such intertum and startling indifference to the presence or absence of that distinguished crowd has existed at the present moment. I am inclined to believe, as a gentleman from the West informed me the other evening, that for once in the history of the republic, the country is altogether too busy to bother itself with the petty wranglings of politicians. Taken all in all it was a gloomy opening. I have frequently attended funeral obsequies, where the ceremonies were decidedly more cheerful than those at the Capitol on Monday. Still I don't know there exists any particular reason why the majority in Congress should be wildly and frantically hilarious over the meeting. I recall at this moment the words of Mr. Thurman uttered during the closing hours of the extra session, when referring to the issue between Congress and the President he said: "The Democratic party is satisfied to rest its case with the people, and mark my words,"—this with a wild flourish of the famous bandanna—"mark my words, the people in the polls will so grandly demonstrate their approval of our course that even the dullest intellect will not fail to hear and understand." Considering that the dullest intellect remains obstinately obtuse, it is possible that the people at the polls didn't demonstrate as grandly as they were expected to. Hence these tears.

In the Senate chamber, the audience was small and the floor subdued and dignified. Mr. Wheeler occupied the chair for the first time since May, and the President of the Senate ad interim, devoted his time and attention to receiving visits of confidence and blowing deliquescent whiffs which had the effect of converting his countenance into the semblance of a freshly boiled lobster. Senator Burnside was as magnificient as ever; and Eaton of Connecticut as effusive as a schoolboy returned from the holidays; Matt Carpenter and Logan lounged about with lighted cigars and were frowned upon by Edmunds, who resembles more than ever the saintly Jerome. Together with Mr. Bayard, who had assisted each other to kill the recess at the German Spa's, he was the recipient of many and evidently cordial congratulations over their safe return, and I think, I detected something like a smile ill fit for his esthetic frontispiece as he wended with one of Senator Moor's caulean jokes. Now don't repeat that as coming from me, if you please, as nothing of the kind was ever charged against him, it smacks somewhat of a yankee and no one would believe you, and I should be suspected of an attempt at black mail. I looked in vain for the festive Blaine, but Hamlin alone resplendent shone, in the shabbiest swallow tail within the remembrance of the oldest inhabitant. All of which is both poetical and exact. No one would have ever suspected Mr. Conkling, as he strode along the aisle to his seat, of having administered a hearty spanking to the Presidential candidate in New York. He was noticeably pale from his recent sickness, but cordial and graceful as ever, as surrounded by a group of senators, he held an impromptu reception until the arrival of the V. P. came down and dispersed it. Hill, Hampton, Lamar, Pendleton, and Butler were among the absentees, and the number of the same was decidedly increased, as the Cleric in a resonant voice started in on the Message, which had been an old story for some thirty-six hours, and not wildly exciting at the best. At its conclusion, Senator Ferry arose to announce the death of Senator Chandler, and to move an adjournment, and the session ended as solemnly as it had opened.

In the House, the crowd was sufficient without being eager or enthusiastic, and the spectacle on the door a trifle more inspiring than a funeral, and not near as lively as an execution. Mr. Cox and Mr. Blackmun supplied the belfourry as usual, without however, their accustomed recklessness of manner; and Gov. Tom Young and Gen. Hawley held high pyramids of flowers, sent up an occasional peal of laughter that seemed altogether out of place amid the ghoulish surroundings. Gen. Joe Johnson and Fernando Wood sat bolt upright and frigid, and the Rev. Dr. DeLamater, the High Priest of Greenbackism, like a factious undertaker smiled with an expression that was ghostly, grim and grandiloquent. Hendrick B. Wright, whose committee "on the causes of the present Depression of Labor," have been junketing about the country for the past four months without having noticed any particular activity outside of its own membership; Heister Clymer, who has sacrificed his huge venerable beard during the vacation; Conger, of Michigan, grown smaller and a decade older over the worry occasioned by his failure to succeed Senator Chandler; Leopold Morse, as jolly, good natured, and communicative as though he had a customer for a full suit in hand; and Garfield, bearing a smile that wouldn't have pleased Thurman worth a cent, were among the portraits caught on the fly from the gallery just a few minutes before twelve. About this hour Alexander Stephens sent his chair spinning down the aisle in front of the Speaker's desk, and Mr. Randall moved out from a little group of mourners and mounted to the chair with about the same air of cheerfulness as he would have mounted the scaffold. He too, had been impatient to appeal to the country by the way, and the majority that replied from Pennsylvania gave him such a fright as to bring on a fit of indigestion with threatening of apoplexy, that seriously alarms his friends and puzzles his enemies. The only example of animation in any manner displayed during the ceremonies, was when Mr. Rogers appeared with the Message. It was a simultaneous shout movement in good order, accompanied with haste and expedition, and while the reading proceeded with about half a quorum present, some of the members followed the reader to catch him tripping or dropping comma or straggling over one of Mr. Evans' sentences, and the balance read and talked and pruned around the floor, and made more noise than the clerk, who went to sleep and was roused again several times, until finally his voice ceased to be heard altogether amid the general buzz and noise and confusion, but as his lips continued to move with regularity it is presumed he struggled heroically to the end. Then an adjournment was moved and the agony was over. Thus ended the first chapter.

The only excitement of the week has been over the panic caused by the suggestions of the President and Secretary Sherman relative to the retirement of the greenbacks. Considering that by a careful computation, there are a hundred over three hundred and fifty separate and distinct plans in Congress looking to the financial safety of the country, the temerity of the Executive in presuming to increase the number could not be expected to meet with other than a crushing reception. Three hundred and fifty odd Congressional souls were immediately in arms and eager for the fray, and an equal number of sensitive feelings were moved to their innermost depths, until on Thursday, Senator Carpenter sprang into the breach with a sagacious bill to let well enough alone, and the three hundred and fifty hearts, more or less, ceased to palpitate at a fever heat and the country is no longer on the verge of dissolution. Everything at the present writing is particularly lovely, and the gosses of party expediency hangs at a corresponding elevation.

TOWN AND VICINITY.
WEYMOUTH HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

The December meeting of the Historical Society, held on Saturday evening last, was one of great interest, although owing to the unpleasant weather, the number present was smaller than usual. The principal attraction was a paper from Robert C. Hull, Esq., of New York, an honorary member of the Society, containing the full account yet presented to the public of his ancestor, Rev. Joseph Hull, of Somersworth, England, who came over from Weymouth, Eng., with a colony of some twenty or more families, and settled in Wessagusset, in 1635. As one of the very earliest settlers of this town, much importance attaches to his history, in throwing light upon our scanty record, and the addition of so many well authenticated facts are contained in this paper will prove of great value to our future historian.

He traces him from his birth in Somersworth, in 1601, to his death in York, Me., in 1665. He graduated at Oxford in 1612, was instituted Rector of Northbridge in 1624, and in 1625, with the company of 100 or more of his friends from his native county, came to Wessagusset, then a settlement of about ten years of age. But finding the old settlers not in all respects congenial spirits, he removed to Hingham, from which town he was soon after representative to the General Court in 1633 and 1634. There he did not find those who appreciated his talents, and he removed to Boston, where he was received with a perfectation of character which assures him a favorable reception whenever dropped into any place. She was vigorously engaged and responded with a frankness and frankness which was the accompaniment for the soldiers and Mr. Arthur B. Murphy furnished a couple of barrels, being engaged in both sections. Mr. Wheeler's capabilities, the "Fashions," being a charming exhibition of their skill and producing a truly ripe of appreciation from the audience. Mrs. Burrell, Misses Young and Nathan, who presented vocal solo, were the recipients of general applause and admiration for responsiveness and singing by Mrs. P. T. Hinde, especially "The Minister's Bedfellow," were marked with a perfection of character which assures her a favorable reception whenever dropped into any place. Letter from Alaska.

SATKA, Alaska, Nov. 11, 1879.

Editor Weymouth Gazette: In my last letter I promised that if I remained here I would give the readers of your valuable journal some further information concerning this territory and its people; but as the small steamer California leaves today on her regular monthly trip, I shall have but little time to write. She arrived here yesterday, bringing among her passengers some miners from San Francisco and other places.

When I came here in June, there was not much excitement in regard to mining; in fact, everything was very dull. But a great change has come over this place and this part of the country since then, owing to the encouraging mining prospects, which have given rise to much activity, accompanied by good success.

The placer diggings are also the gold found in the quartz ledges, about fifteen miles from here, mostly north, and some of the placers extend nearly to salt water. The Indians often bring fine specimens of quartz from the northward, and the miners here believe that the headwaters of the rivers contain very rich diggings.

The principal route to the mines is by the river, but a trail will probably be made over the mountains in next season. The climate is very healthy, the temperature in summer ranging from 50 to 60 deg. and in winter, I am told, from 30 to 40. Some mines can be worked in winter, and probably all, with steam power, the entire year.

Provisions are very reasonable, costing no more than in Nevada and Idaho. It is not improbable that this place, before many months, will be the centre of great mining excitement, and this country, in no distant time, either surpass Nevada, Colorado, Arizona, or any other gold region.

There are some old "Forty-niners" here from California, men who have been in the mining business more than a quarter of a century, who visit the dance halls and gambling halls, go their pile on the turn of a card, and then, having lost all, are off for another sate at the mines, just as they did in the old golden days.

There is no government here at present. A provisional one started in August, ceased to exist after a short trial, and now the miners are in favor of starting another form of government. The Indians are very quiet at present. A miner was shot here by another miner recently, and is now in charge of the captain of the James town, awaiting orders from Washington. There seems to be no laws in force here, except those of the U. S. government, while the ship of war is here; but probably law would be administered as in California in '49, and Judge Lynch exercises authority.

How long the James town will remain here is not known. She is still lying at anchor opposite the town and squads of the "boys in blue" are on shore every day, sometimes on liberty and then at work. Since June they have built a wharf for the steamers, and commenced another for coal.

Sometimes they are meeting a plank walk, and at one time last summer a party of the men feuded in a crooked ground for the benefit of the Collector or the port, and to keep out the mules. But it seems the two animals of that noble race which St. Louis would not allow the fence to remain, and so it was broken down. The collectors and men have been in good health since their arrival, and Capt. Beardley has done much toward restoring order among the people of this place.

A Presbyterian church has been organized at Wrangell, the first American church in the territory, and Catholic church and an industrial school are also new acquisitions.

Many of the miners will winter here, and lively times are expected. You will probably have reports from here in time, in relation to the mineral resources of Alaska, that will astonish the world. —WEYMOUTH.

BREVITIES.

The man who was kicked out of the house by an irate parent didn't laugh in his leave.

An old, broadsheet of the style worn by the Puritans over 200 years ago was lately found, among a lot of old iron in a shop at Lake Village, N. H. It weighed twenty-five pounds.

The foliage is getting mad; that is so, it's on its set.

An immense amount of iron and iron-ore imported from foreign countries is now being delivered at Baltimore. The consignments consist of ore from Europe, Asia and Africa, pig iron from England, and old rails,

"A FOOL ONCE MORE." For ten years my wife was confined to her bed with such a complication of ailments that no doctor could tell what was the matter or cure her, and I used up a small fortune in bungling stuff. Six months ago I saw a U. S. doc with Hop Bitters on it, and I thought I would be a fool once more. I tried it, but my folly proved to be wisdom. Two bottles cured her, she is now as well and strong as any man's wife, and it cost me only two dollars. Such folly pays—H. W. Detroit, Mich.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

DON CAMERON.

The new chairman of the Republican Committee.—His prestige and his Methods.—An analytical sketch of a successful leader.—Does it mean Grant?

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20th.

Now that Congress has come and gone, for the holidays, the social and political season fairly inaugurated and this nation once more on the road to progress, the occasion offers to pick up a few of the threads that have been dropped in the process, and among them I know of none more important than the action of the Republican National Executive Committee and its selection of a chairman.

I think our political history presents few examples of success achieved by the power of personal application, as prominent as that of Don Cameron. Within a period of five years, a young and unknown aspirant for fame's eternal niche, bursting suddenly and unheralded from a limited private sphere of existence, has managed to climb from obscurity to the leadership of a great party, overleaping the traditional chasm of long and tried service and swinging fairly and squarely to the fore, despite the opposition of the strongest and most popular of his party associates. Personal daring and irreverence are the sole secrets of Don Cameron's success. It has been his wonderful and unsuspected dash and rapid marches which unexpected filling upon theanks of the adversary, that has marked the course of this most successful of modern political leaders. From the moment of his emerging from the retirement of Harrisburg, Don Cameron has made no mistake. His assumption of personal responsibility in emergencies, is no type of a coward. He has never spared the party whip, and I have noticed that men who have made the best mark in political life have been those whose lash has been the longest and has reached the most backs.

Ten days ago, the fact of the near meeting of the Republican National Committee at Washington, first commenced to be talked about. Zach Chandler's death had left a vacancy in the chairmanship, and a dozen names were mentioned for the succession, none of them with special prominence, but with a general impression that Blaine held the winning cards. No one knew exactly what was to be done. The Chairmanship of this Committee is the most prominent position in a Presidential campaign. It has generally the control of its management; selects the time of meeting of the nominating Convention, and calls it to order; raises and disburses the campaign fund, and places it where it will do the most good; dictates the plan and method of prosecution, and generally holds the reins of the machine-carried as the procession moves onward. A man in such a position cannot well avoid responsibility, even should he desire to. He is likely to be held to strict accountability, without much punishment in case of defeat. Few men are competent; and fewer are master-whips. Zach Chandler had been tried in the furnace and not found wanting. "Hayes has one hundred and eighty-five votes, and is elected," said he, at a meeting when every other republican from Maine to Oregon had accepted Tilden as an accomplished fact, and one hundred and eighty-five it was, even through the labyrinth of an Electoral Commission. Zach Chandler never evaded responsibility, and was to be depended upon. But Zach Chandler was beyond the reach of political complications and no one had any idea who could succeed him. In the meantime Grant was moving grudgingly across the state of Pennsylvania, and incidentally the telegraph informed us that he had had an interview at Harrisburg with Don Cameron. Well, there was nothing strange in that. Cameron was known to be an intense admirer of Grant, a stout advocate for a third term, and a "stalwart" without evasion. Beside that, Cameron had been Grant's Minister of War. What more natural than that Cameron should have an interview with his old chief, or any number of interviews for that matter, without there attaching any political significance that any one need to trouble themselves about.

Suddenly the Harrisburg interview breaks up; the silent sum proceeds onward to Philadelphia and Don Cameron packs his valise for Washington. A man by the name of Freeman—whom ever heard of Freeman?—resigned as the member of the R. N. Ex. Com., and Don Cameron is appointed to succeed him. Who appointed him? Probably Don Cameron. D. C. appoints pretty much everybody and everything in Pennsylvania. Is really of no consequence. Freeman disappears, and Cameron emerges from the place of his exit. Then somebody starts the rumor that Cameron is a candidate for the chairmanship. The Blaine men laugh at the idea; and the Sherman men smile, as though the presumption was a sufficient explanation of the rumor. Nevertheless the Blaine men commence to count noses, and are amazed to discover that they haven't exactly a sure thing after all. Then Frye assumes the lead and assembles his forces at his residence on the eve of the meeting. A candidate is selected and goes into the meeting with nineteen votes. Twenty-two is a bare majority, and twenty-two was precisely the number cast for J. Donald Cameron. One can believe that had he needed a dozen more, they would have been forthcoming; and every one knows that the Blaine men had either day or two to go before Don Cameron would have never carried away the prize. Dash, nerve, daring, activity, are the winning canals in peace. In war, what does it mean? Well, nine out of ten believe it means Grant, and death happens any day, what a does mean! It is clear that Grant is the first choice of Cameron and that if he is to receive the nomination, the campaign is to be presented on a stalwart, no-compromise, no-surrender platform, wherein every trifling concession will be left to the change. It means a brilliant, brilliant, audacious campaign, with plenty of muscle and bold, reckless charging along the whole line. Where Don Cameron leads, no republican need be ashamed to follow.

Joined to this sudden dash and blustering is an instinctive and natural instinct of common sense and practicality that will be likely to relieve his prosecution of the coming campaign from all sentimentality and foolishness. It has been a characteristic of the Cameron dynasty, to rule through fear rather than love. They have had to be stern, and their party leaders rather than beloved. They have never courted popularity, but through industries and sagacious process of personal attachments have multiplied friends and won over enemies under a rule of competition that enabled them to command success in all their efforts.

The Cameron's have always looked upon parties, men, money, honors, arms, and governments, purely in a business sense. They are not means to an end, but ends in themselves.
